In the fall of 1999, there was a Titanic exhibit in the World Trade Center in Boston, Ma. A friend, who is a bus driver and a Titanic aficionado, happened to be finishing his route by the WTC late one night as they were bringing in the famous "big piece" which is a key feature in the exhibit. (Its a huge piece of salvage metal from the ship.) He pulled over and watched the proceedings then, to his delight, he was asked if he would lend a hand (they were having a little difficulty with the size and awkwardness of handling the piece and there were only a few men working at that late hour.)

As a reward for his help, the men offered him a small piece from 'the big piece'. He was kind enough to pass along to me a piece of his souvenir. I hate to part with it but times are tough.

I will include the letter from my friend which he gave to me when presenting with the piece of the "Ship of Dreams"
